SUBMARINE QUAKE BREAKS BIG CABLE

Panama, Oct. 2 .- An official statement issued today concerning the earthquake shows the violence of the vibration at At $:30 octock Thursday morning. D. C. Huntington, proprietor of the shop at 510 Overland street, reported to the detectives that his place had been entered Wednesday night and a type-writer taken. Twenty minutes after the report the detectives had Juan Sanches and the missing typewriter. The entrance to the place was gained by breaking off the lock on the rear door. Beside the safe in the place was found a hammer and a broken file. The detectives believe that an attempt would have been made to open the safe, but that the burglars were frightened away by the man who sleeps at the store. 11:25 last night was so great that it threw the pen off the paper of the seis-mograph and consequently an exact record of its duration was not obtainable. SENATE EXTENDS TERMS OF JUDGES

Ciscuit Judges of Commerce Court Will Hold Offices Until December In-stead of Ending Now.

Washington, D. C., Oct. 2.-The terms of office of the five circuit judges now serving on the United States commerce court, which would have ended at once under the provisions passed recently by the house have been extended to Dec 31, by the senate appropriations committee.

The committee also endorsed the provision abolishing the commerce court and legislating its five judges out of office, but gave the latter about three months in which to prepare for their retirement.

The senate committee added to the bill $20,000 for the payment of assist-ants to the attorney general and district in special government cases.

BURROS GO BY EXPRESS.

Two gray burros, aged 9 months each, went by express over the Texas & Pacific Wednesday night to Paducah, Ky. C. W. Moss expressed the animals to some of his relatives living in Paducah.

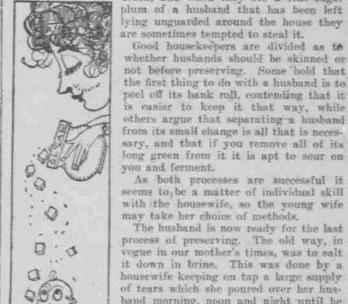

HE main dish-the piece de resistance-as the French say-in the great majority of homes is husband, either served plain, or with a sauce diable, yet, unfortunately, the great majority of women never learn how to prepare this staple article of diet so that it either agrees with them or is pulatable to their tastes.

To properly preserve a husband begin by selecting your husband with great care. Do not pick out one that is too young, for it, will be callow and flavorless, and it will soon pall upon your palate. Besides it requires too much watching tomake it worth the trouble of preserving. Neither choose one that is too old, for it will be tough and cross-grained and soured by age.

But choose a husband of medium age, not too young and not too old, and pay more attention to whether it is sound and sweet, and ripe and mellow and tender than you do to its looks. Be careful to see that the husband you pick out has not a rotten heart, and is not either tart and acid or too mushy, for neither of these specimens can be successfully preserved for home consumption. The only thing than can be done with them is to pickle them in alcohol. Having selected your husband, carry it home without shaking it, and keep it under lock and key. Much depends upon your carefulness in this respect, for alas! many of our dearest lady friends have kleptomaniae tendencies and a sweet tooth, and when they see a real sugar lying unguarded around the house they are sometimes tempted to steal it. Good housekeepers are divided as to whether husbands should be skinned or not before preserving. Some hold that the first thing to do with a husband is to neel off its bank roll, contending that it is easier to keep it that way, while others argue that separating a husband from its small change is all that is necessary, and that if you remove all of its long green from it it is apt to sour on you and ferment.

As both processes are successful it seems to be a matter of individual skill with the housewife, so the young wife may take her choice of methods. The husband is now ready for the last process of preserving. The old way, in vogue in our mother's times, was to salt it down in brine. This was done by a housewife keeping on tap a large supply of tears which she poured over her husband morning, noon and night until he was as sticky and salt as a keg of codfish. This means of keeping a husband did not prove satisfactory, however, and the modern scientifiic woman preserves her husband in sugar instead of salt.

197 (Sabe To do this make a syrup of home comforts consisting of three hundred and sixty-five good dinners a year, a clean and cheerful house, with a wife who is a ministering angel in it; flavor this mixture with enough independence to keep a man guessing-bushels of love, a dash of deviltry, entertaining conversation to taste, a liberal supply of laughter and a practically unlimited amount of jollying

Steep the husband in this mixture and keep it simmering on the hearth-stone, and you will have no trouble in turning out an article of the preserved husband that would take a prize at any country fair and be easily salable at a Woman's

N. B.—The success in preserving a husband lies in making the domestic sauce so sweet and strong that the kind made away from home will seem weak and flavorless beside it. This recipe for preserving husbands has been tried by our experts, and it is guaranteed to work. Follow it and you cannot fail.
